

CAN YOU TRULY BE YOURSELF AT WORK?

Ann Inger Hallager,
Warehouse/Logistics

Ann Inger lives with the inflammatory condition Sjögren's syndrome, which makes long periods of stationary work difficult. She can contribute in a 50% role through dialogue, openness, and acceptance. At Veidekke, we believe these very differences contribute to development, innovation, and value creation. That's something we can all celebrate.

Working environment is the theme for this year's OHS week. Have you thought about how crucial the working environment is for how we function and how happy we are at work? How important it is that we include and accept each other regardless of our visible or invisible experiences? Let us create a workplace where all people can be fully themselves at work.

CAN YOU TRULY BE YOURSELF AT WORK?

Thomas Engström,
Project Manager

As a gay person, Thomas knows how important it is that everyone can be entirely themselves at work so that we don't need to play a role that distracts from our work tasks. At Veidekke, we believe these very differences contribute to development, innovation, and value creation. That's something we can all celebrate.

Working environment is the theme for this year's OHS week. Have you thought about how crucial the working environment is for how we function and how happy we are at work? How important it is that we include and accept each other regardless of sexual orientation? Let us create a workplace where all people can be fully themselves at work.

CAN YOU TRULY BE YOURSELF AT WORK?

Asma Al-Hassani,
Project Engineer

As a devout Muslim, Asma knows how important it is to be accepted for who you are at work, and she is conscious that openness counteracts prejudice. At Veidekke, we believe these very differences contribute to development, innovation, and value creation. That's something we can all celebrate.

Working environment is the theme for this year's OHS week. Have you thought about how crucial the working environment is for how we function and how happy we are at work? How important it is that we include and accept each other regardless of our faith? Let us create a workplace where all people can be fully themselves at work.

CAN YOU TRULY
BE YOURSELF
AT WORK?

Ane Sangnes,
Head of Communications

As a lesbian and a woman, Ane knows the reality of being a minority in the workplace. She is actively engaged in helping Veidekke create an inclusive culture for everyone. At Veidekke, we believe these very differences contribute to development, innovation, and value creation. That's something we can all celebrate.

Working environment is the theme for this year's OHS week. Have you thought about how crucial the working environment is for how we function and how happy we are at work? How important it is that we include and accept each other regardless of gender or sexual orientation? Let us create a workplace where all people can be fully themselves at work.

